BEETHOVEN MUSIC GREATLY PLAYED

Josef Hofmann's Masterly Interpretation of the Noble Emperor Concerto.

MEMORABLE PERFORMANCE

The "Coriolan" Overture and Seventh Symphony Also on Programme.

In the natural order of things the climax of the Symphony Society's Beethoven festival should be reached Saturday evening when the ninth symphony is to be performed; but those who attended last evening's concert must have felt that homage to the great master could attain no more eloquent exposition than that made by Josef Hofmann's interpretation of the E flat plane concerto.

The programme comprised three numbers, the overture to "Coriolan," the seventh symphony and the concerto, which was fortunately placed at the end. The concert thus proceeded in an artistic crescendo. The overture, to be candid, was played badly. Its performance was rude. exaggerated in accent and coarse in tone. The symphony went much better. There were a few questionable nuances in Mr. Damrosch's reading, but on the whole he treated the work with dignity and with

Mr. Damrosch has recently lapsed into some habits of conducting which he aban-doned years ago, and it is a pity, for they doned years ago, and it is a pity, for they distract attention from merits of sound value. The conductor permits himself too much freedom of bodily movement and at times conveys the impression that he is wanting in self-control. This was noticeably the case in the symphony last evening. The scherzo, which Mr. Damrosch conducted less graphically than the other movements, was played the best.

Mr. Hofmann's performance of the "Emperor" concerto was the greatest which The Sun's reviewer ever heard. It was adequate, moving, uplifting. It was opulent with beauty, noble in style, reverent in feeling. It was not what older concertgoers were taught to regard as typical Beethoven playing, and for this let us be exceeding glad. Time gaid as typical Beethoven playing, and for this let us be exceeding glad. Time was when planists were practically forbidden to admit grace of manner or mellowness of color to the E flat concerto lest they be accused of emasculating it. Mr. Hofmann demonstrated last evening that it was possible to fill its pages with every tint known to the planist's palatte and put every one of them in the right place.

It will be understood from this that it was not a dry performance. It was glow-ingly poetic, but while it radiated feeling master The plano sang always but never effeminately. The perfect adaptation of the technic of a supreme virtuoso to the interpretation of great music was a source of unceasing delight. What exquisite sensitiveness in the delicate scale of accents, what profound appreciation in the combination of infinite grades of force with infinite variety of color! What symmetry in the punctuation of phrases and what range of artistic vision in their subordination to the general plan!

It would exhaust the vocabulary of enthusiasm to praise in detail this grand and touching performance. Mr. Hofmann has before this shown himself to be an executive musician of the largest intelligence and the most creative imagination, and he has not now to make himself known as a Beethoven player of the highest rank, but on no previous occasion has he accomplished anything in which all the essential elements of commanding authority were so splendidly conjoined as in last evening's performance. Those who had the good fortune to receive this fine inspiration of a master planist will cherish it in their memories for life.
